To Flee or Not to Flee?

Marian Terry

Recently at a Florida Association of Crime Stoppers meeting, the discussion was about tip and reward exchanges. Most of the 33 Florida programs have a spoken agreement with each other. That is:

1. If an arrest is made in any other program's district from a tip pertaining to a fugitive from your district, they pay the tip and the originating program reimburses them.
2. If a tip is turned into your program giving information on the whereabouts of a fugitive that is in the area of another program. You will either transfer the tip directly to their Tipsoft program or, to the law enforcement coordinator in the affected program.

Most programs now have web pages listing the fugitives from their area, so it makes the state shrink down to the size of a computer. Communications are so fast and accurate that it makes it very difficult for fugitives to hide in another part of the state. Panhandle Crime Stoppers recently had a call from the Citrus County Crime Stoppers Program. Someone from Bay County had called in a tip to them pertaining to a fugitive from Bay County. They made the arrest and wanted to pay the tipster through our program. Several years ago there was a homicide here in Bay County. Through our program a tipster alerted Miami authorities that the suspect's were at Miami International Airport awaiting a flight to South America, they were captured and returned to Bay County.

The Question is: To Flee or Not to Flee? Crime Stoppers answer is: Save your money and turn yourself in! Anyone can call in a tip, and there are a lot of “anyone's” in Florida!
